

LIBERTY POLITICS

PANEL RULES

For everyone who joins a Liberty Politics panel

1. Before you go live

- Arrive at least ten minutes before the show starts.
- Use a good microphone and a good webcam, on a stable internet connection.
- Camera on while you speak, pointed straight at your face and not from the side. VTubers excepted.
- If you use a VTuber avatar it has to move and react while you talk. A still picture is not a camera.
- Have a decent background. Flags are welcome, they show where you stand.
- Set a StreamYard profile picture, ideally a headshot, for when your camera is off.
- Before the show, check StreamYard is using your best microphone.
- In StreamYard turn on all three: echo cancellation, background noise reduction, and automatic mic volume.
- Use a mic stand without springs, and a mic that does not pick up every touch.
- Your StreamYard link comes to you on Telegram. Never share it with anyone.

2. How you behave on air

- No personal attacks on the hosts, the panelists or anyone in the chat.
- If a host pulls you up on air, do not argue it on the stream or in the chat. Raise it afterwards.
- Do not argue with hosts, producers or mods about the rules while we are live.
- Do not tell the mods how to mod, or the hosts how to host.
- Be respectful to the host and to the other panelists.
- Never interrupt someone mid flow, even to agree. Wait until they finish.

3. The host runs the show

- The host decides the topics, what is off topic, and when to move on. On air that call is final.
- Let the host stop you when they need to, without taking offence. Make the show easy to run.
- Tell the host you have something to say rather than waiting for your name to be called.
- Ideas about format or structure go to the host before or after the show, never during.

4. Technical problems

- Do not spend show time explaining what went wrong. Mute, fix it, come back ready.
- Mute your microphone whenever you are not speaking.
- Do not touch your mic or your mic stand while your mic is live.
- If something has to be flagged mid show, put it in the StreamYard private chat, briefly.

5. The StreamYard private chat

- Watch it. It is where the host directs the show.
- Keep messages short so you do not pull the host out of the conversation.
- No arguments in there, with anyone.

6. Read things out loud

- Many people are only listening. Nothing on screen exists for them unless you read it.
- When you highlight a comment, read the username and then the message, slowly and clearly.
- Read captions out at a pace someone can follow without seeing the screen.
- Do not comment in the Liberty Politics chat while we are live. Your own chat is fine, as long as it never pulls you out of the discussion.

7. Promotion

- On our streams you may mention your own YouTube channel and the Skool community, including your affiliate links.
- Let the host promote your channel for you. It lands harder and keeps the flow. Send them a script if you want particular wording.
- Nothing else is promoted while we are streaming on Liberty Politics. Anything else goes on your own channel, on your own time.
- Set up your Skool affiliate link. You keep 50% of what it brings in, and saying you are active in the community is what makes it work.

8. Suggesting topics

- Send them to the host well ahead of the show, never on air.
- Video suggestions work best, ideally from X. A high like count proves the demand is real. Not mandatory, but it helps.

9. The community

- No drama. Do not scheme with other members against anyone here, and never group up to pressure a mod, an admin or a host.

10. Only if you have your own YouTube channel

- Your channel has to be a Brand Account, not a personal one. Only a Brand Account lets you add someone else as a manager, and that is what makes the simulcast possible.
- The panels can stream on your channel too. Add Armin as an admin so StreamYard can include it.
- Tell Kaveh well ahead of time which panels you want to join, so your channel is added.

These rules apply to everyone on a Liberty Politics panel, starting with your next stream. Anything you disagree with, raise it with a host before or after a show and it will be heard. Not following them means you stop being invited.
